

ARMY BRAT PACK

See How The Army Brat Pack Handles Deployments!

FOREWORD

The word family elicits a strong emotional response from Soldiers. When deployed, they need to know that their families are safe and secure. Their morale and their ability to concentrate on the mission depend on it. Success on the battlefield is largely attributable to high morale. How well we care for the families that remain behind when Soldiers deploy is therefore critical to our success in the Global War on Terrorism.

Families remain an integral part of our great European community while Soldiers are deployed. Your efforts to take care of yourself and your family, often while working full-time outside the home, enable deployed Soldiers to concentrate on their missions, knowing that all is well on the home front. I remain dedicated to providing for your well-being to ensure your family continues to grow and prosper while your Soldier is deployed.

In our ongoing campaign to support you and your family during the deployment cycle, I directed that this guide be developed for our younger members of the USAREUR team. A dedicated and talented multidisciplinary team produced this age-specific guide to help children during deployment and reunion. This guide and the USAREUR Family Focused Deployment Information Web site are designed to support your continuing efforts on the home front.

As you use this guide, remember that your well-being is a source of strength to the deployed Soldier in your family. Also remember that you are not alone. Rear detachments, family readiness groups, and community agencies are here to help you.

In closing, I want to tell you how grateful I am for all you are doing to maintain the strength of your family during these challenging times. In doing so, you are not only helping the Soldier in your family, you are making a great contribution to the overall strength of our extended USAREUR family, thus enabling us to be ready for Any Mission, Anywhere.

B. B. BELL
General, USA
Commanding

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY
HEADQUARTERS, UNITED STATES ARMY, EUROPE, AND SEVENTH ARMY
UNIT 29351
APO AE 09014-9351

Deputy Chief of Staff, G1

April 16, 2004

SUBJECT: Open Letter to USAREUR Parents

Dear Parents:

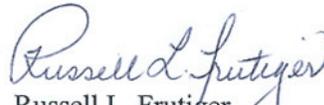

Every child responds to a parent's deployment differently, experiencing a wide range of emotions. To address this issue, we offer these age-specific resources. A child's responses are dependent on a myriad of factors with a common element – age/maturity. A 3 year old may be crushed by the deployment assuming they did something to cause the parent to leave; a 10 year old may dive into the role of the deployed parent, essentially trying to assume the duties and responsibilities of providing comfort and support to the other parent and family members; while a teen may be torn between sadness that the parent deployed, anger that the parent would leave, and anxiety about the changes occurring upon the deployed parent's return.

The developmental stages across childhood make addressing this subject in a single overarching document impossible. The presentation method used to engage a 4 year old will not interest a teen. Keeping this in mind, the guide includes four unique age-specific sections. There is a section for parents and a coloring book section designed for the 3 to 6-year-olds; a comic book format highlights the 7 to 12 year old section; and the teen section reflects a graphic novel style with more mature content and art.

This guide contains material derived or borrowed directly from published materials on childhood, separation, and deployment. The Heidelberg Army Community Service (ACS) staff has been instrumental in providing historical and storyboard materials for deployment and children. The Air Force and Navy also contributed source materials to this guide. In particular, the Air Force Crossroads website provides an excellent source of concise information focused on enlightening the parent.

Child specialists from the Heidelberg MEDDAC Behavioral Health Clinic reviewed each section of the guide for age-appropriate content and accuracy. We will continue to update the guide to reflect experience and knowledge gained over time regarding the effects of deployment and reunion on children. We hope these guides and the associated web links on the USAREUR Family Focused Deployment Information web page provide you and your family with information to ease the trials of deployment and the challenges of reunion.

Sincerely,

Russell L. Frutiger
Brigadier General, GS
Deputy Chief of Staff, G1

Parent's Guide

to Children, Deployment & Reunion

The next few pages are a quick reference to the stages of deployment and reunion. They touch on the phases of deployment and the critical issues that should be addressed to successfully maneuver through each phase.

There are tips for you about engaging your children on the topics throughout this booklet.

For a more in-depth approach to the same material we suggest you link to the Parents Guide to the Military Child During Deployment and Reunion at:

http://www.militarystudent.org/kthrough12/docs/Parent_Guide_Deployment.pdf.

This site is sponsored by DoD in collaboration with each of the military services and many other civilian and governmental agencies. This is indeed an excellent resource.

Pre-Deployment

Parents can help children understand and accept the deployment of a loved one and their feelings about it by planning ahead. Anticipate the problems and discuss them with the entire family.

Preparing The Home Front - Preparing The Family

The pre-separation period is stressful for parents and children. Confronted with an extended absence of a parent, family members sense a loss of continuity and security. Children may not fully understand why one of their parents must leave. Very often young children may become confused and fearful that Mommy or Daddy will desert them.

Children are not very good at expressing fears and feelings in words. Anger and a desire for revenge, as well as guilt for feeling that way, are often demonstrated in the child's behavior. Change is puzzling to children. They want everything to remain the same. When changes occur, children usually have no other way to release anxieties, and nowhere to go for help. At a time when the separated spouse's responsibility to the Army becomes more demanding of their time and energy, the remaining spouse may feel overwhelmed, as they prepare to solely support the children, and home.

What can be done about relieving the stress of the pre-family separation period? The following ideas have been helpful to others in similar situations:

Talk To Your Children About The Deployment Before It Happens

Communicate your thoughts and feelings about the separation. Be open and honest. Some parents worry that advance warning will only give the child more time to fret. However, children can sense when something is about to happen and worry more when they are left in the dark. Knowing about the deployment in advance helps in adjusting to the idea.

Reinforce Your Emotional Bond

The departing parent needs to spend some QUALITY time with each child before they leave. Younger children (under 8) will be willing to accept a half hour of face-to-face communication. Don't be afraid to hug your child. A display of affection is powerful communication. Older children (8 and over) appreciate being consulted when deciding how long and where this "special" time together can occur.

Use this time to share pride in your work, unit, the Army, and the purpose for your deployment. Children of school age are beginning to understand that some events must happen for the good of everyone. It is a little easier to let go if Mom or Dad's job is seen as essential to the mission of the Army.

Don't Take "No" For An Answer

Often when asked if something is bothering them, a child will say "no." But there are ways to get through. Make some casual reference to your own worries or ambivalent feelings about the impending deployment or something that enables parent and child to share similar feelings. It also helps a child to realize their parent is a real person who can cry as well as laugh, and it models an appropriate way to release feelings--talk about them.

Visit Your Child's Teacher

Frequently children react to deployments by misbehaving in class or performing poorly in their studies. A teacher who is aware of the situation is in a better position to be sensitive and encouraging. Delivering a note to the teacher with the child reinforces the idea that the teacher is aware of the change in the child's life and may increase their value as a resource during times of stress.

Plan For Communicating

Express an expectation for the children to stay in touch with the departed spouse. A lively discussion needs to take place before departure. Encourage children to brainstorm the many ways communication can occur in addition to letter writing, such as cassette tape exchanges, photographs with their parents, encoded messages, "puzzle messages" (a written letter cut into puzzle parts that must be assembled in order to read), unusual papers for stationery, and pictures drawn by preschoolers.

Help Children To Plan For The Departure

While the spouse is packing their bags, allow your children to assist you in some way. Suggest a "swap" of some token, something of your child's that can be packed in a duffel bag in return for something that belongs to the departing spouse.

Discuss the household chores and let your children choose (as much as possible) the ones they would rather do. Mother and Father need to agree with each other that that division of household chores is reasonable. The role of disciplinarian needs to be supported by the departing member.

Become familiar with some of these excellent children's books that deal in a sensitive manner with a variety of family-change situations:

"A Special Family Friend and a New Adventure"

by Hoffman and Sitler

"Will Dad Ever Move Back Home"

by Paula Hogan

"All Kinds of Families"

by Norma Simon

"If You Listen"

by Charlotte Zolotow

"The Goodbye Painting"

by Linda Berman

"The Giving Tree"

by Shel Silverstein

Reading them with your child can help clarify facts and identify feelings.

Deployment

The deployed parent can help children accept the separation of deployment and maintain strong family ties by remaining a tangible part of their child's life. As duty allows the opportunity to maintain that special touch across the miles needs to be taken.

Spanning The Miles - Being A Long Distance Parent

Parenting while away from home is not easy. Some separated parents find it so emotionally difficult they withdraw and become significantly less involved in the lives of their children while they are apart. This, of course, is not good either for the parent or the children, not to mention the difficulty it causes the parent/caregiver who is at home alone. The most important aspect of parenting from a distance is making those small efforts to stay in touch. Doing something to say the parent is thinking about and missing the child is what is most important.

Tried and True Methods

Here are some practical suggestions to help keep the absentee parent involved with their children:

- ☆ Letters and cards from Mom or Dad are important. The length and contents are not nearly as important as the presence of something in the mail from the absent parent with the child's name in the address line. When sending picture post cards, make little notes about the place or write that you stood right here "x" in the picture. Any small thing which makes the card personal will have tremendous meaning to children at home.
- ☆ Cut out and send things from the local paper or magazines. This is a tangible way to help them feel connected and give them an idea of what life is like there.
- ☆ For older children, a subscription to a favorite magazine is a gift that keeps on giving.
- ☆ When using a tape recorder, remember to be creative: sing "Happy Birthday," tell a story, read scripture, take it with you on your job or when visiting with other members of your unit. Don't try to fill a tape completely in one sitting. Make sure you describe the surroundings, the time of day, and what you are doing.

- ☆ Try not to forget birthdays and special holidays which would be important to a child, particularly Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, Halloween, or Valentine's Day.
- ☆ Try to schedule phone calls when children are likely to be at home. Keep a mental list of things you want to talk about with each child, such as their friends, school, ball games, etc. Ask each child to send you something from the activities they are involved in at school, home or outside activities like dance lessons, youth groups or scouts.
- ☆ If your child has a pet, make sure to ask about it.
- ☆ Send an age appropriate gift for each child. It should be something special just for them. Some interesting and creative gifts include a special notebook for school, a book for coloring or reading, or something unique from where you are stationed.

Turn On Your Sensors & Tune In To Your Child's Worries About The Assignment Or Deployment

Just because a child doesn't tell you about their concerns doesn't mean that they are not troubled. Children don't usually recognize the cause nor will they tell you they are concerned. This may occasionally be the source of the unexplained "bellyache." The spouse that is departing should communicate with each child individually. There is no substitute for a letter with your own name on the envelope. Send postcards, snapshots, and tape recordings of the sounds around you where you are deployed. Use unusual stamps, felt-tip pens, colored pencils, and different styles of alphabets and lettering.

Children Need To See The Parent's Workplace

Very young children need to see where Mom or Dad eats, sleeps, and spends some of their day when away from home. You can do this through pictures or TV videos. This provides them with a concrete image of where the parent is when they can't come home. Older children can learn a great deal from the parent about the function of his or her job, the sophisticated technology, interdependence of each division of the military with the other, and of course, career direction.

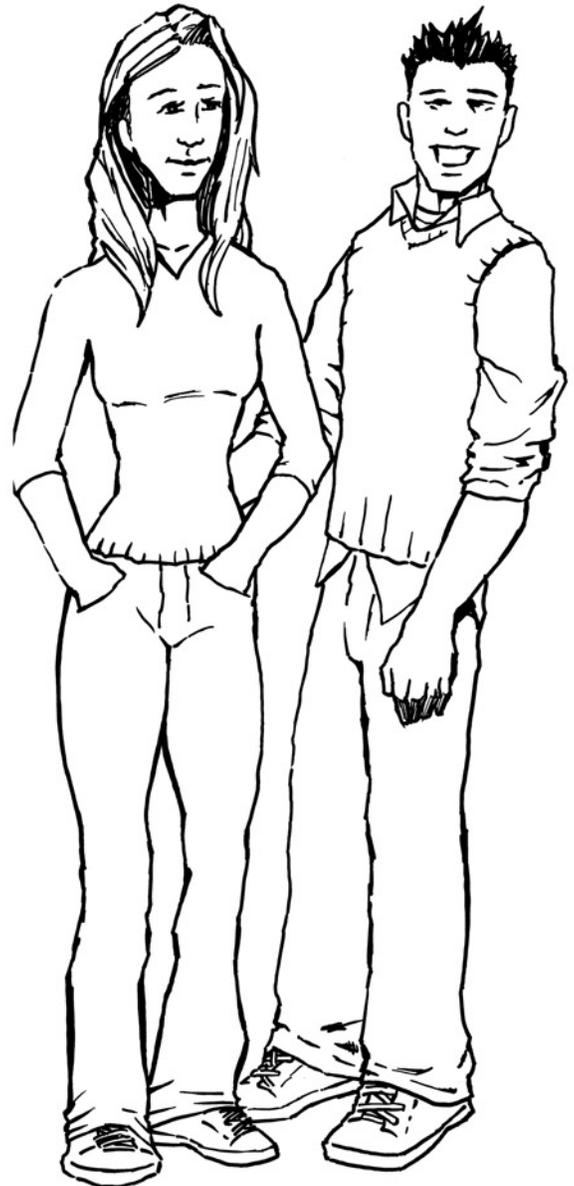

Keeping The Home Fires Burning Tips For The Custodial Spouse

It is very possible you will admit feelings of sadness, self-doubt, fear, or loneliness to your spouse and children. Most parents will agree that these are acceptable risks, and the feelings revealed are much easier to deal with when they can be expressed within the comfort and security of the family.

Be honest about your feelings. Do not attempt to hide feelings--your own or the children's. Many times we try to spare our children from knowledge of our own concerns, self-doubts, and fears.

Give children a method of measuring the passage of time. Families use such techniques as a ceremonial crossing-off of each day on a calendar as it passes, or of tearing a link off a paper chain consisting of the number of days or weeks the departed spouse will be away. These and other activities can be found in the ACS Activities Books on the USAREUR Reintegration Web Site.

Be responsible for all disciplining. Do not fall into the trap of using, "Just wait until your Father or Mother gets home" as the ultimate threat. How can a child be expected to greet with joy and affections a parent that has been held over their head for months as the ULTIMATE PUNISHER?

Putting it back together

The Reunion

Homecomings should be very happy occasions as long as all family members make an effort to be as realistic as possible. If the tendency to not pick after oneself around the house occurred before the separation, that habit probably has not miraculously disappeared. If one of the children was experiencing problems at school, do not expect the problem to disappear at reunion time.

Talking to one another and working through the everyday challenges that family life presents is what is important. This does not all have to be accomplished on the day of the family reunion. Give yourselves some time to enjoy one another. Everyone needs to get reacquainted before problem solving begins.

Tips for the Deployed Parent

Ease yourself back into the family gradually. If you come on like an Abrams tank and try to bulldoze your way back into your family's life, feelings of resentment will surface. Don't be surprised if some family members are a bit resentful of your deployment. Others often think of the deployment as more fun and exciting than staying at home- even if you know otherwise. You need to consider yourself as a "Special Guest" for a while.

Take some time to observe how the family has been running in your absence. You might be tempted to jump right in with "Now that I am home, there are going to be a few changes around here." You will see that some things will change naturally as a result of your presence in the family. If you disagree about the way other things have been handled, wait a few days and discuss it openly with your spouse. If your practice before the deployment was to hold an executive session with your spouse before taking issues to the "family meeting" don't change what worked.

Take it easy with the children in terms of discipline. For a while, stick with the rules your spouse has established during your absence. Take time to understand how your family may have changed during the separation. Immediately playing the "heavy" will not open up opportunities for you and the children to get to know one another again. It is not difficult to understand why some children are afraid of the returning parent if all they have to look forward to is "a changing of the guard." Show interest and pleasure in how your family members have grown and mastered new skills in your absence and let them know you are proud of them. Comment on positive changes.

On the other hand, sometimes it is easy to spoil your children. If you have not seen them for a long period of time, or you are home for only short periods of time, you may find yourself not wanting to discipline them. You are probably eager to make up for the time you were unable to spend with them. This is certainly understandable. But do not put your spouse in the position of constantly playing the "heavy" while you have all the fun with the children.

Tips About Children

Some children will keep their distances from the returning parent for a while. They may still have unresolved feelings of anger toward that individual for leaving them, and are not ready to allow that parent to be part of their lives yet. They may have to be "courted" for a while until they feel comfortable again. Infants and small children may be shy or even fearful around you at first. Be patient and give them time to become reacquainted.

Other children will become "clingers." Each time the parent disappears from sight for a few moments, they think the adult has gone away from home again. As a result they tend to hold on for dear life and not let the parent out of their sight. Be patient. This will pass with time as they see you leave and return again.

At reunion time Dad could be meeting his new infant son or daughter for the first time. This can be quite an emotional experience for everyone, including the infant. Parents, do not feel that you have to thrust a crying infant into the arms of the returning members. Do not feel overwhelming rejection if your infant will not come to you at first. Give the child some time. Infants are people too, and they need time to develop trust before they feel comfortable with a new adult in their lives.

Plan to spend some time individually with each one of your children by doing some activity that is special to them. This allows the parent to get reacquainted with each child in a way that is most comfortable for that particular child. It also makes each child feel special and appreciated for their individuality. Also, plan on spending some time with the entire family doing family things, but be flexible if teens have other plans.

Expect your children to have changed, both physically and emotionally. Sometimes the changes are barely noticeable from day to day, but if you go away, you might discover upon your return that your toddler is walking, your fourth grader has learned the multiplication tables, and your teenage daughter has a new boyfriend.

Successful Homecoming

Tips for the Custodial Parent

Plan on some family togetherness time. Suggest a picnic or a special family meal. Time together helps the returning spouse to get back into the rhythm of family life.

Stay involved with your children's school activities and interests. Don't neglect the children's need for attention as you are becoming reacquainted with your spouse.

Don't be surprised if children test the limits of the family rules when your spouse returns. It's normal for children to want to find out how things may have changed by acting up a bit. Consistent enforcement of family rules and even-handed discipline are key to dealing with acting-out.

Reunion

Handouts

Reunion is often the most confusing period of the Deployment Cycle for the family.

In recognition of this we include three handouts that deal exclusively with children and reunion at different ages and a focus document for returning single parents. There is also a quick reference guide included for rapid referral.

If you are encountering more difficulty at home than you can comfortably handle don't hesitate to contact your local Medical Treatment Facility, Chaplain, or Army One Source at:

the OCONUS number is

00-800-464-81-077

(dial all 13 digits),

free of charge to all callers.

If you can't dial 1-800 number free, calls can be made collect to 484-530-5889.

Reunion

Basics

Change is at least as stressful for children as it is for adults. The homecoming of the deployed parent is a major change for the children in the household. They have grown physically, emotionally, socially, and spiritually during the deployment. Children are not skilled at coping with their stress in large part because they have little life experience. As a result, they may temporarily act out or regress to a less mature stage of behavior as a part of their reaction. In any event, there will be a readjustment period-- typically 4 to 6 weeks--for the entire family. You can greatly enhance your family's reunion by developing realistic expectations of how your child will respond to the military parent's return based upon the child's age. So let's discuss what you can generally expect of different age children, and how you can facilitate the reunion process with your children. As you know, children are not "miniature adults," but rather developing individuals who change rapidly in their thought and behavior patterns. So, a 1 year-old, a 5 year-old, and a 14 year old will all respond very differently to your returning.

Infants (Birth to 1 year)

An infant has not yet developed much of an ability to remember people and events. Accordingly, as painful as this might be for you to consider, do not expect baby to recognize the parent who has returned from a long deployment. Instead, expect him/her to initially react as if the military parent were a stranger. The infant will likely cry when held by the military parent, pull away, fuss, and cling to the person who was his/her primary caregiver during the deployment. Once again, "go slow." The baby will "warm up" to the military parent at his/her own pace. The newly returned parent should gently get involved in holding, hugging, bathing, feeding, playing with, and otherwise caring for the baby. The key is to be patient and let your baby's reactions be your guide in terms of what pace to proceed in getting acquainted.

Toddlers (1 - 3 years)

A typical toddler response would be to hide from the newly returned parent, to cling to his/her primary caregiver, cry, and perhaps regress to soiling if he/she is potty trained. Again, give your child space and time to warm up to the military parent. It helps for the military parent to sit at eye level with your child (to look less intimidating) and talk with him/her. The pictures you have seen with a returning parent sitting on the ground talking to a child showed a well-informed soldier. A gentle offer by the military parent to play with the toddler may be helpful, but do not force the issue. Doing so will only intensify your child's discomfort and resistance. Also, it may have helped the child to more clearly remember the deployed parent if the stay behind caregiver frequently showed him/her pictures of the military member and said "Daddy" or "Mommy," as the case may be. This is true because for children at this age, the old adage "out of sight, out of mind" aptly applies.

Preschoolers (3 - 5 years)

Children in this age range tend to think as though the world revolved around them (egocentric thinking). Keeping that in mind, it's not surprising that your preschooler may think he/she somehow made the military parent go away; or that the military parent left because he or she no longer cared about the child. If this is the case with your preschooler, he or she may feel guilty or abandoned. As a result, your child may express intense anger as a way of keeping the military parent at a distance, thereby "protecting" himself/herself from further disappointment. Your preschooler is also likely to do some limit testing (see if familiar rules still apply). To promote the reunion process, wise parents will accept the child's feelings, not act overly concerned, and focus on rewarding positive behaviors. It is good for the military parent to talk with the toddler about his or her areas of interest, be it storybooks, toys, or whatever and give the preschooler some undivided attention. Meanwhile, the military parent should support the other parent's enforcement of family rules but be careful about too quickly stepping into an authoritative role. The toddler needs time to adjust to the military parent once again being an active participant in his/her life.

School Age (5 - 12 years)

Children in this age range are likely to give returning parents a very warm reception if the parent-child relationship was strong before the separation. The school age child may excitedly run to the military parent as soon as the parent gets off the plane. He/she will be inclined to try to monopolize the military parent's attention and "talk your ear off" during the drive home and then want to showoff scrapbooks, hobby items, or school projects when the military parent gets home. If, on the other hand, the military parent's relationship with the school age child was strained, the child may fear the military parent will punish him/her for all the child's misbehavior during the deployment. Such a thought process may lead the child to at first be shy or withdrawn around the newly returned parent. At any rate, it is best for the military parent to have friendly interest in what the child has done during the time of deployment and praise him/her for his/her efforts and accomplishments.

Adolescent (13 - 18 years)

As you already know if you're the parent of an adolescent, they can have mood swings that go up and down like a roller coaster. One moment they are solving problems in a reasonable and logical way and the next may be reacting in a purely emotional and childlike fashion. So, your adolescent's reaction to your return may be characterized by mixed emotions. Like the school age child, your adolescent will likely be very excited to see the military parent again, if the relationship was amicable prior to the deployment. Sometimes, however, adolescents are reluctant to publicly express their emotions and may be more concerned about acting "cool" in front of their peers. Adolescents tend to be very sensitive about being unfavorably judged or criticized. With this in mind, be sure to make time to discuss with your adolescent what is going on in his/her life as well as what you've experienced. As with sons and daughters of any age, it's critical to give your adolescent some of each parent's undivided pleasant attention.

Reunion & the Single Parent

If you're a single parent and in the military, you may be experiencing some unique concerns about reuniting with your children. More specifically, if you're a custodial parent, have you thought about how your children have bonded with their caregiver during your absence and how that will impact your relationship with your children as well as with the caregiver? If, on the other hand, someone else has primary custody of your child, you may wonder how your child will respond to you since you have likely missed "regular" visits with him/her.

Strategies for coping with these situations are very similar to those described in the Reunion section. There are however, a few additional issues to consider. If you're a custodial parent, then your children probably have been living with someone else for several months. Accordingly, to the extent this has been a fulfilling relationship, the bond between this caregiver and your children has strengthened. Your children's increased loyalty to their caregiver may be painful for you in that you may initially feel unneeded or even jealous. Again, go slow.

Focus on communicating both with the caregiver and your children, and recognize that you and your children will need to adapt to living with each other again. Your children have been living with someone else who probably had different rules and procedures compared to your own household. Give yourself and your children adequate time to "shift gears". The adjustment period, which may take several weeks, can at times be awkward. You can smooth the transition process by first of all actively involving the caregiver with the transition. To force young children to suddenly separate from the caregiver can be emotionally traumatic. Secondly, since your children have lived with different family rules and procedures, take time to compare with them the rules of your home. As you're doing this, seek your children's inputs regarding how they would prefer life at home to be. They need to feel included in the process of reestablishing the structure and "flavor" of your home environment.

If you are a non-custodial parent, your children's living conditions were probably not impacted by your deployment. Your visits with your children have, however, been curtailed. As you reestablish these visits, remember you and your children have grown and you will need to take time to get reacquainted.

10 Tips for Parents for a Positive Reunion

Source: Dr. (Col.) Tom Hardaway, Chief of the Department of Behavioral Medicine, Brooke Army Medical Center, Fort Sam Houston, TX

1. Know the expectations of the returning warrior.

Knowing the expectations of the returning parent is important in every family. While you likely have expectations of what you and your returning spouse will do together again, as do the children, take a moment to step back and think where your returning spouse is coming from. He/she has been in a constant state of deprivation, hot and uncomfortable climate, strained sleeping conditions, sand everywhere, day after day without leave or weekend breaks. In addition, food has been monotonous, and your spouse has likely been exposed to the loss of or injury to fellow compatriots. There has been the constant threat of loss of life or injury to self. What has kept the warrior going is the feeling that the cause is just, concern about family back home, a very close connection with fellow soldiers, and thought after thought of regaining the things available at home.

2. Do not be surprised at expectations of entitlement.

Just as you may not have been quite aware of your spouse's expectations, do not be surprised or hurt that initially, your spouse may have spoken or unspoken expectations of entitlement. Returning spouses' feelings are that they have laid down everything for several sustained months in the conditions described above, and that those at home are just waiting to "make it up to them". They may seem to be oblivious to your expectations and desires at first. It is important not to take this personally, or as a sign that they have no concerns about the family's desires or expectations.

3. Be aware of your own expectations.

It is likely that you have had to bear an extremely large burden in the absence of your spouse, in caring as a single parent for children, attending to responsibilities in the home previously performed by your spouse, and may have had to endure many hardships and crises that you knew would not be helpful to share with your spouse in phone or e-mail conversations. You and your family may have "reconfigured" a little to remain stable, and may have established some newly found independence, perhaps with the finances. Perhaps there are now some new routines and rules in the home. Your expectation may be that your spouse would be pleased and congratulatory at your ability to do this.

4. Be aware that you and/or your children may have mixed feelings, which is normal. It is most usual for families to be very excited and happy about a returning soldier. But they also may have some anxiety or apprehension. There may have been pre-existing conflicts in the home, which most likely remained unsettled during the deployment. Children may feel that they have not been attentive enough in communicating with their deployed parent, or may have been acting up in their absence, or may have done poorly in school. They may be worried that the returning parent may be angry. Spouses may be concerned that they may lose some of their new independence, or that they may not have attended to the house or family well enough; or that their returning spouse may intrude and "change things all around".

5. Children may not act as expected or desired.

Upon the return of the deployed parent, children may behave in paradoxical fashion. At the first moments of reunion, they may jump forward and embrace their parent, or, on the other hand, may stand back and even be reticent at first. Very young children may not remember their parent well, and may even treat that parent as a stranger. It is important for both parents not to take this as a bad sign or to take it personally. Different children may need help warming back up, and it will only prolong that warming-up period if parents become indignant or angry about their behavior. Some "wooing" by the returning parent and coaching and encouragement by the other parent will help things to become positive and warm again.

6. Encourage your children to be aware of their expectations and worries, and assist them in sharing them with you without fear of your reactions. If they have concerns or worries, help them to understand these are normal, and help them engage in problem solving. Reassure them as to the love that their deployed parent has for them, and that if there are some problems to be sorted out, that everyone will work to solve them. Encourage them to suggest things they definitely want to do with their returning parent, and prioritize these activities so that there will not be an onslaught of expectations from the parent. Help the children to see ahead of time that things will have to happen in order, and that the returning parent may not be able to attend to all their desires right away.

7. Try to share your and your children's expectations and any concerns ahead of time in your phone conversations prior to the returning spouse's redeployment home. Ask your returning spouses what they have in mind for when they return home. Allow them to express the things they really desire and miss, and encourage them to prioritize the most important things. This will get them to be more consciously aware of their own expectations. Then, share with your spouse what you hope will happen, and help him/her to understand what some of your desires are and some of the hopes and worries of the children. Keep these interactions in a positive and anticipatory mode. An example might be: "Jeff can't wait for you to get home. He is a little worried that you might be upset with him about his schoolwork, and about his behavior before you left. I told him that you will be excited to see him no matter what, and if there are school issues to work out, that we both will help him to get back on the tracks. How do you feel about his worries?"

Or, "Rachel is just 16 months right now, and remember you've been gone for four months. She says "Daddy", but she may still not act the way you expect. Give her a little time, and I know she'll be excited you're home after awhile. Hopefully, she'll surprise us!"

8. Help your children understand that their returning parent may need some alone time and not to perceive this negatively. Redeployed soldiers have been living in a very intimate, close-knit unit, with little privacy. Coming back to the home environment can be somewhat overwhelming, especially with very excited children in the house. Help them anticipate that their returning parent might need some "down" time and not necessarily always respond to their desires for activities, etc.

9. Be prepared that your spouse may not appear as sensitive to your expectations as he/she should be. This is not necessarily a sign that he/she doesn't care, but understand that he/she may not behave exactly as you have been anticipating many times over. This is a time when it is even more important than usual to be explicit in what you are hoping for. Waiting for him/her to get "your clues" right off may make you resentful, and may make your spouse feel as if he/she is letting you down, leading to further resentment. Use humor and don't be afraid to talk directly. If he/she feels that he/she has already let you down, he/she may not feel that there is any way to correct the situation and may just become defensive. Give lots of chances for your spouse to hear you, and let him/her know how much you appreciate it when he/she exhibits the behavior you wanted. As with children, you want to "encourage good behavior"!

10. There are successful reunions, but no ideal ones.

"Ideal" is something that is only in fantasy. A mature and successful reunion is one where all concerned are aware of their own desires and concerns, and aware of those of their spouse and children. Along with the all the positive and excited moments, there are the very natural feelings and problems that require serious discussion and problem solving. The successful reunion includes excited smiles, embraces, laughter, and humor.

It also requires a mature understanding that in order for the separation to be have been a positive experience, we must give a lot of "slack" to each other, do a lot of talking, a lot of planning and problem solving, and some forgiving. Children should know when it is all said and done, that their parents both love them now more than ever.

10

Children's Reaction to Soldier's Return

Reactions birth to 1 Techniques

YEARS

Cries Fusses Pulls away from you Clings to spouse or caregiver Has problems with elimination Changes their sleeping and eating habits Does not recognize you	Hold the baby, and hug him/her a lot Bathe and change your baby; feed and play with him/her Relax and be patient; he/she will warm up to you after a while
---	---

1 to 3
YEARS

Shyness Clinging Does not recognize you Cries Has temper tantrums Regresses-no longer toilet trained	Don't force holding, hugging, kissing Give them space Give them time to warm up Be gentle and fun Sit at their level
---	---

3 to 5
YEARS

Demonstrates anger Acts out to get your attention; needs proof that you're real Is demanding Feels guilty for making the parent go away Talks a lot to bring you up to date	Listen to them Accept their feelings Play with them Reinforce that you love them Find out the new things on TV, at preschool, books he/she will warm up to you after a while
--	---

5 to 12
YEARS

Isn't good enough Dreads your return because of discipline Boasts about Army and parent	Review pictures, schoolwork, activities, scrap books Praise what they have done Try not to criticize
--	---

13 to 18
YEARS

Is excited Feels guilty because they don't live up to standards Is concerned about rules & responsibilities Feels too old or is unwilling to change plans to a commodate parent Is rebellious	Share what has happened with you Listen with undivided attention Don't be judgmental Respect privacy and friends Don't tease about fashion, music
--	--

Like most Saturdays, the ARMYBRAT Pack hangs out at Ernesto's playing video games.

Get'er Ernesto!
Get'er!

Say Good night Ernesto.

Yes!

I can't believe it, she beat you again!

Yeah, he's being deployed. He'll be gone about six months.

She always beats me. Hey Raych how 'bout a rematch?

Your dad's leaving? Wow, that must be tough.

Hey, Ernesto. Whenever you're missing your dad and need to talk...gimme a call.

My dad's unit is leaving soon, too. I don't think I'll like it much. No one to watch the games with, more work around the house for me.

Six months! I wouldn't mind if my step-dad went away for a while. I get tired of him always yelling Thanks, Keesha.

Not tonight gotta go home early today. Promised I'd help mom get dad's stuff ready to go.

Same goes for you, Rachel.

Hi, I'm Rachel. We know what it's like to have parents in the Army. And we know what's it's like when they leave on deployment.

I'm Kim. My mom and step-dad are both soldiers. I don't like it, but I'm glad I've got my ARMYBRAT Pack friends.

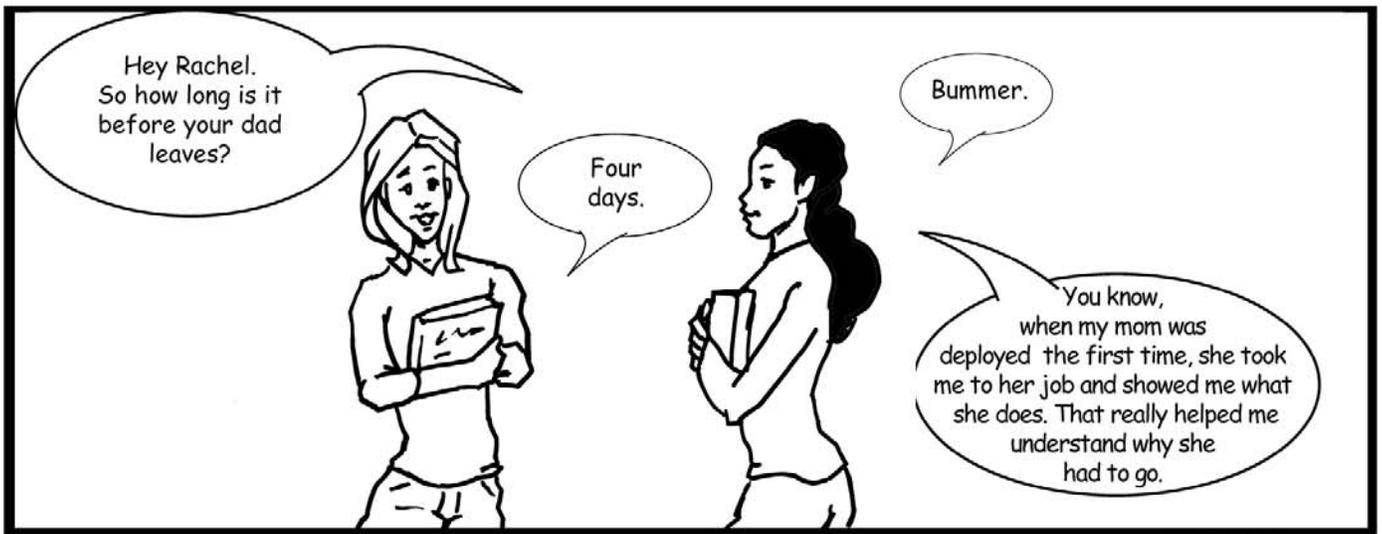

I'm Ernesto. We call ourselves the ARMYBRAT Pack. My dad's in the Army and Mom's in the Army Reserve.

I'm Keesha. My mom's in the Army. Most of us have been through a deployment a time or two.

We're the ARMYBRAT Pack. And we're here to talk to YOU about DEPLOYMENT!

Hey, get the facts about your parent's Army job. Here's some things you can do and questions you can ask to learn more about what they do. But remember, some jobs are CLASSIFIED, and your parents might not be able to tell you much.

See if you can visit their worksite or office. Ask them...

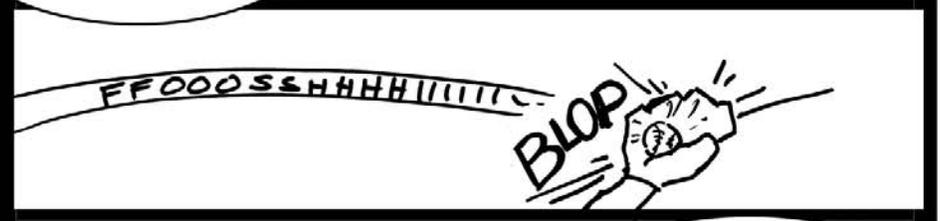

- * What do you do?
- * Who do you work with?
- * What machines or equipment do you use?
- * What's the weirdest or coolest thing that has ever happened to you on the job?
- * What do you like the best about your job?

Hey, Jason, what's going on?
You look a little down.

We just got the news
today that my dad is being deployed for a few months.

Bummer.
My mom and step-dad have left lots of times. Sometimes just a few weeks. Sometimes a few months. Once my step-dad left for over a year.

Yuk.
I'd hate it if my dad was gone a whole year.

Ah! You would do OK.
After the 9-11 thing, they both were gone for a while. It was tough, but I stayed with some relatives nearby and life went on pretty much as usual.

I don't like it
when my mom leaves.
That means it's just my step-dad and me.
But I found it helps a lot to ask questions before they go, so you know what's going on.

Wassup?

That's the basic message. Find out from your older brother or sister what's going on. Ask your mom and dad for details.

Make like a reporter from the school newspaper and ask the four Ws: What? When? Where? Why? Where is your mom or dad going? Why are they going? When will they go? When will they be back? What will they be doing while away?

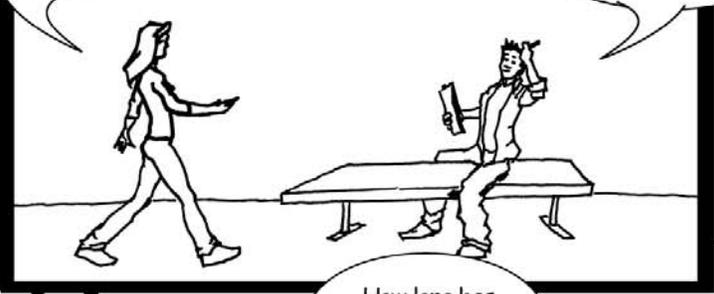

SSSHH!...
Remember, sometimes your parents can't say much. So try to understand. It may be...
TOP SECRET!!!

school's out.
YES!

Hey Ernesto
Whaddya writing?

Just some stuff
about my dad.

How long has
he been gone?

'bout six weeks. Seems like forever.

Yeah,
I like to write my thoughts and feelings down in a journal, too, when my dad's away.

Hey, Raych.
You ever notice how often we say "yeah" when we start talking to each other?

Yeah, it helps me
sort out what I think and feel about this whole thing.

Yeah.

Yeah.

Yeah,
I write things that I just couldn't tell others.

Check it out. In the back of this book are some sample journal pages. Tear them out, and copy them. Or get a notebook yourself, and start your own journal. If you want, you can share it with your family or your own ARMYBRAT Pack. Or keep it just to yourself. Happy journaling!

What about me? Nobody ever asks what I want!

So what's this mean now that mom's leaving? ...What's it going to be like with just him and me at home?...It really stinks that she's gonna miss my birthday.

Hey, Raych. I just had to call someone and blow off steam since my mom's leaving.

I'm so sorry, Kim. I know it's tough. But don't make a bad situation worse by getting all mad at your dad.

I know. I guess I'm a little afraid.

It's OK to be afraid and confused. Asking questions and talking about your feelings can really help. Finding out answers to these questions might help.

- *What's expected of me now?
- *Besides Mom or Dad leaving, what's going to change?
- *What's going to happen on birthdays and holidays?
- *Will Mom or Dad be able to write me?
- *Who'll go to special events with me, like the school play?

SECRET WORD

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	----

Secret Word: Answer each question with an unscrambled word to find the SECRET WORD.

- Where are you _____?
- When will you _____?
- How _____ will you be gone?
- Will the family _____ change?
- Will you _____ to me?
- What will you be _____?
- Who will watch me _____ soccer?
- Will you _____ me?

- GINGOG _____ 9
- VEALE _____ 4
- NOGL _____ 5
- LESRU _____ 2
- WERIT _____ 10 8
- NIOGD _____ 1
- PALY _____ 3 6
- SIMS _____ 7

Hey, Kim. I hear your mom's leaving.

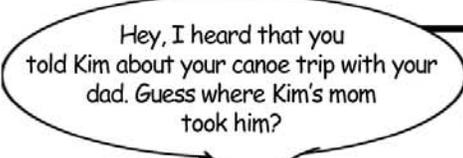

Yeah.

I got an idea. My dad took me canoeing before he left. It was really cool. Maybe you can ask your mom to do something with you before she leaves. Whaddya think?

I dunno.

Hey, I heard that you told Kim about your canoe trip with your dad. Guess where Kim's mom took him?

Do I look like a mind-reader?

Cool

They went to the shooting range. Kim's a pretty good shot, too.

It's not always possible; but if you can, try to spend some special time with your mom or dad before they leave. Here's some ideas.

- *Make something special for your mom or dad before they leave.
- *Ask them if you can do something special together.
- *Ask them if there is anything that they want you to do for them before they leave.
- *Make a "Going Away" package for them to take with them.

Here are some things that you might put in a "Going Away" package.

Here's some ideas of what you can put in a "Going Away" package. You might want to hide it in your parent's duffel bag, so they can be surprised once they get there.

*Pictures of you and your parents

*Their favorite gum or candy

*Shoe polish (the kind in the can)

*A handkerchief or two

*Writing stuff (pens, paper, stamps, preaddressed and stamped postcards or envelopes)

*Needle and thread

*String or fishing line

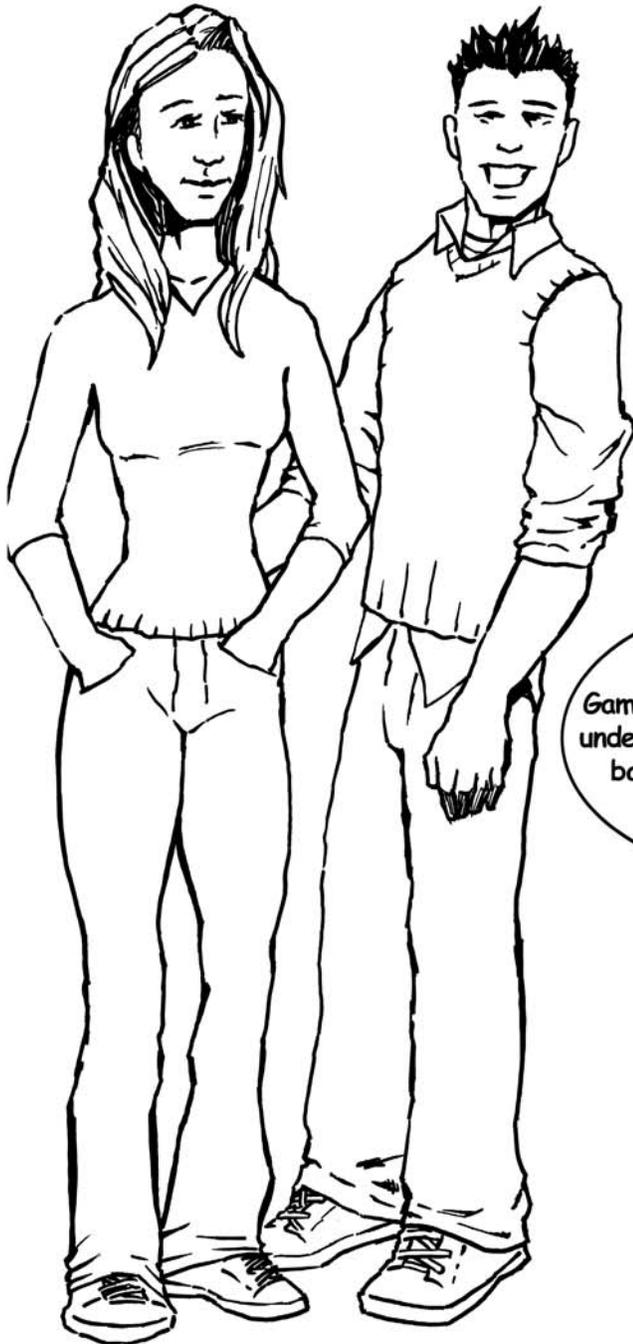

*Some clothes pins and safety pins

*A yoyo

*A few jokes, comic strips, stories, or poems

*Something small and special of yours to remember you by (Especially, something you made for them)

When my dad went away, I put my Gameboy and his favorite game under some clothes in his duffel bag. Thought he might like something to do on his down time.

Goodbyes probably are the worst thing about having parents in the Army.

Saying Goodbye is probably the hardest thing I've ever done.

It's okay to be sad and cry.

It's okay to be mad.

It's even okay to laugh or giggle.

When you say goodbye your feelings can get all mixed up.

I hate it when you leave!

Saying Goodbye is hard.

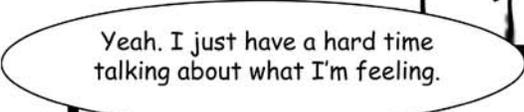

Hey Kim,
What's up?

What's wrong Kim?

Nothin'!

Yeah. I just have a hard time talking about what I'm feeling.

It's pretty tough when a parent is deployed, right?

Been there.
But for me, I found the more I kept it bottled up, the worse it got. It helped me a lot to talk with someone
I trust.

There are plenty of people you might share your thoughts
and feelings with--a parent, grandparent, coach, minister, friend, brother,
sister, teacher, or youth group leader.

And
if you decide to chat online about your feelings,
remember safety
first!

Visit these cool websites
designed for kids just like you:

Military Teens on the Move
<http://dticaw.dtic.mil/mtom/>

Army Teen Panel
<http://www.redstone.army.mil/armyouth/atp2.htm>

Check out these rules for online safety.

Kids' Rules for Online Safety

1. Never give out personal information, including addresses, phone numbers, or your school's name and location.
2. Tell your parents right away if any information you come across makes you feel uncomfortable.
3. Never agree to meet with someone you "met" online without first checking with your parents. Then only meet in a public place, and bring Mom or Dad along.
4. Don't send anyone your picture or other things without checking with your parents first.
5. Never respond to messages that are mean or make you feel uncomfortable. If you get messages like that contact, or have your parents contact, your Internet Service Provider.
6. Talk with your parents about rules for going online. Then keep those rules.
7. Never give out your Internet password.
8. Be a good online citizen. Don't hurt others or break the law.

When a parent leaves, you may have a lot of different feelings. See if you can find the 15 feelings hidden in this puzzle.

A I D Y Z D E T I C X E Z L S L O F
 G M D E S S E R T S J W B I X U A U
 P O J Z I O D S I M O K A Y P P A H
 V U Q Z N F E E U R O D L D G A C N
 D E T A R T S U R F K E U P B W W F
 U F N I L N A I J A N G R Y C S B K
 J Y J R E I E W T O C O M Y W R K S
 M L F T V D L N L A U S C D Z O L F
 O P H F Y J P R G D S A D N V U P Z
 J R U D U W Z F V I J F S G Y R E R
 N P L W C R U F G U Z J Y P I L O N
 T T B A G K T A K S T O K E F U C H
 N D L H U W C P P H J E M E O L F V
 L Q N G C D B C Q I A V V Z R C Q V
 O L Q C L D B T Z G O Q E G A B R M
 N O O Z S V F W O B R O W K W J Q X
 M N E F X I W E I K V C I J D Q M W
 B U I O R F O O R P P B L P D I K R

ANGRY	CONFUSED	EXCITED
FRUSTRATED	HAPPY	LONELY
OKAY	PLEASED	PROUD
SAD	SATISFIED	SCARED
STRESSED	TENSE	WORRIED

Stressed?

When your mom or dad is gone, it's easy to get stressed out. Pay attention to your stress level. When it gets too high, do something about it. Take this simple test to see how stress may be affecting you. Check all that apply.

- * Trouble sleeping?
- * Loss of appetite or eating a lot more?
- * Feeling confused?
- * Feeling impatient with everyone?
- * Feeling like punching someone's lights out?
- * Having trouble concentrating?
- * Don't really care about anything anymore?
- * Feeling like nobody cares about you?

Stress Can Affect

YOUR BODY

- *Headaches
- *Nervousness
- *Rashes
- *Stomachaches
- *Fast heartbeat
- *Sweating

YOUR MIND

- *Poor concentration
- *Forgetfulness
- *Problems with school
- *Problems studying
- *Carelessness / taking risks
- *Loss of interest

YOUR FEELINGS

- *Bored
- *Angry
- *Nightmares
- *Sad / depressed
- *Scared
- *Withdrawn

It's normal to experience some of these things during hard times. But if you're stressed for too long, it might harm your body or day-to-day life. There are positive ways to deal with stress

So what can you do to feel better when you're stressed out?

1. Be aware of the signs of stress.
2. Take action to avoid STRESS OVERLOAD.

- * Take deep breaths.
- * Think positive.
- * Relax and chill out.
- * Meditate, pray, or read something inspirational.
- * Talk with a friend or counselor.
- * Exercise.
- * Eat nutritious meals and snacks.
- * Punch a pillow, scream, or kick a can.
- * Set realistic goals.
- * Take one thing at a time.
- * Stop worrying about things that may never happen.
- * Stop worrying about things that you can't control.
- * Learn from your mistakes.
- * Get busy doing things you like to do.
- * Make time for fun.
- * Do something for others.

Chill Out

When we're stressed we try to keep busy and do fun things. Here's some things we like to do when we're stressed or feeling down.

Get connected

- * Join a club.
- * Be a volunteer.
- * Fix, grow, or build something with a friend.
- * Listen to music with a friend.
- * Get a rap group going with other kids like you.
- * Hug somebody you like...real hard!
- * Invite your best friend to do something fun.
- * Help your parent around the house.

Be good to yourself. Do something fun. Be cool, and Chill Out!!! Believe me. Talking with friends and learning to chill out really helps.

Get moving

- * Hike, jog, or ride your bike.
- * Join a karate class.
- * Play ball.
- * Go swimming.
- * Play video games.
- * Go skateboarding.
- * Ride your bike.
- * Play tennis.

Get your mind going

- * Watch an upbeat video.
- * Get a joke book and tell your friend some jokes.
- * Write your parent about a favorite time you had together.
- * Daydream.
- * Lie down under a tree and watch clouds go by.
- * Re-read a favorite book or check out one from the library.
- * Draw or paint a picture.
- * Go to a movie.
- * Write in a journal.

Some thoughts make you feel worse.

I can't do anything right.
I did rotten.
My life is a mess.
I'm so stupid.
I'll never get it right.
I'll never be able to do it.
I really messed up.
I'm stupid.
It's my fault.

But positive self-talk can help.

I'm handling myself better now.
I did good today, not perfect, but good.
I can fix the mistake I made.
I learned something useful today.
I'll do better next time.
I can do that.

Think of ways to stay close to your mom or dad while they're gone

Be the family reporter and make a "newspaper" or a videotape "news story" to keep them up to date. Tell about everyday or ordinary stuff. Moms and Dads like hearing from you and about you.

Send your mom or dad a care package. Personalize it with photos, snacks and some pleasant surprises.

Tape record family conversations, special events or special messages for Mom and Dad.

Send stuff in the mail.

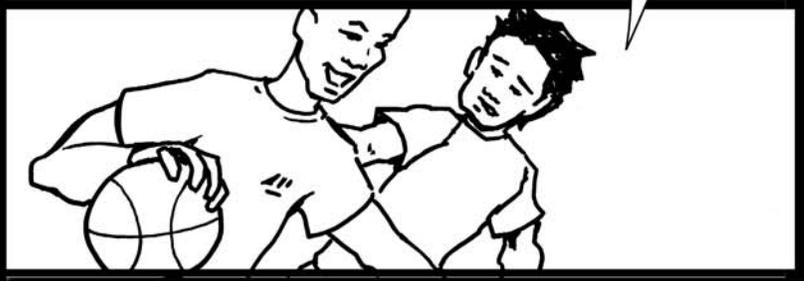

Be creative. There are plenty of ways to keep in touch. Do whatever works for you and your family.

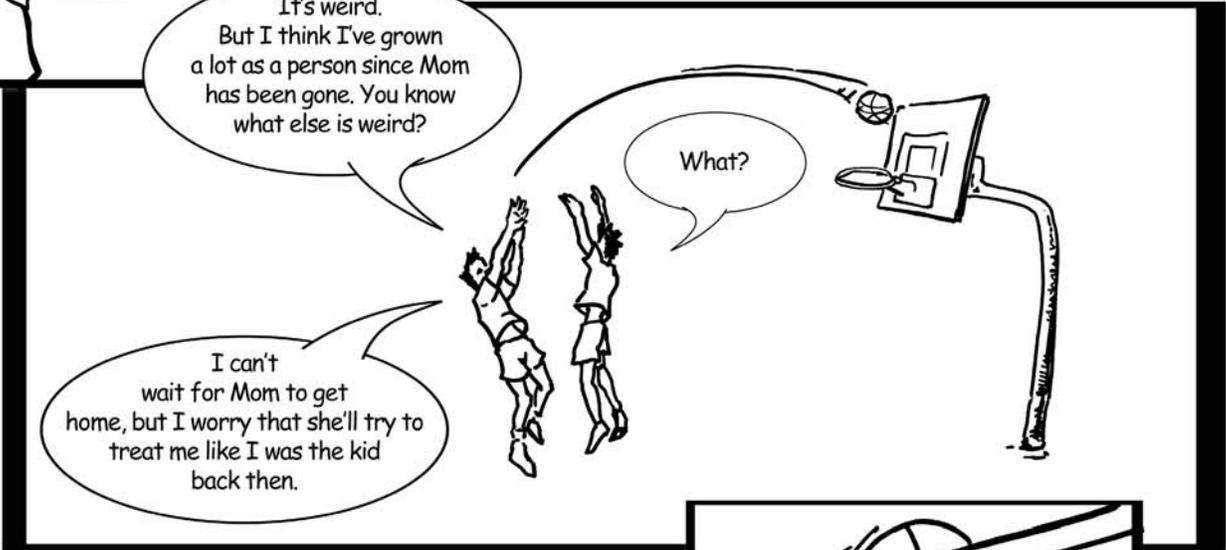

I can't believe that in a couple days my mom will be back.

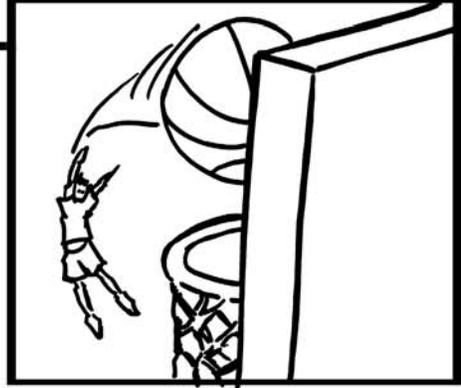

So do you think you've changed over the last few months?

It's weird. But I think I've grown a lot as a person since Mom has been gone. You know what else is weird?

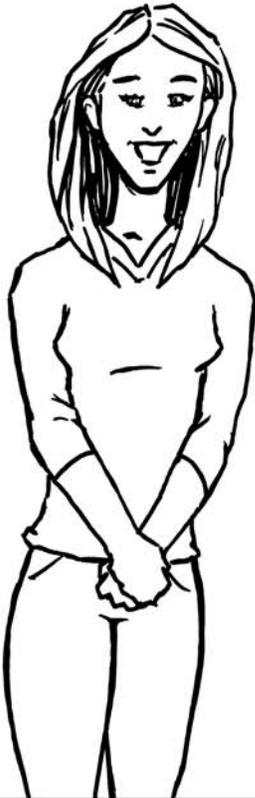

I can't wait for Mom to get home, but I worry that she'll try to treat me like I was the kid back then.

I think a lot of times my dad's homecomings are just as hard, if not harder than when he leaves.

There are lots of things you can do to help get ready for your mom or dad's return.

* Make a banner.

* Cook something your parent and family really likes.

* Make "coupons" that your parents can exchange later for "special benefits," like agreeing to babysit your little brothers or sisters so mom and dad can have a night out.

* Try writing a homecoming letter to help you and your parent get back into the swing of talking with each other again.

Hey, Guys. thanks for being there for me while mom was gone. It's REALLY good she's home, even though we've got some adjusting to do.

I think the first few weeks are the worst, especially since everyone else wants to spend time with them, too.

Yeah, it always takes me and my Dad a little time to get to know each other again. Wait till he finds out I have a boyfriend!

Yeah, but at least the ARMYBRAT PACK has a secret weapon...We've got each other and know how to CHILL OUT!

