Auto Skills Center named best in the Army

The USAG Schweinfurt Auto Skills Center on Conn Barracks has again garnered the top Department of the Army award for auto crafts shops across the globe.

"Luck has nothing to do with it" that Schweinfurt's facility has won twice in the last three years, said facility manager and certified auto mechanic, Tom Woditsch, referring to the 2007 Army award.

Evaluators paid close attention to the facility's programming and automotive-and-facility enhancements made over the last year.

"Since financially ... we were very successful in 2007 and 2008, we were able to utilize that money and purchase some improvements for the facility," Woditsch said. Among some of the purchases were a Tungsten Inert Gas, or TIG, welder and a tubing bender machine to bend exhaust pipes.

"Everything that I asked for from this command, from the garrison in Schweinfurt, I was given. ... It was no longer a question of do we really need it or not. It was more of a 'When do you want it, when do you need it?' which was not the case in other places I've worked," Woditsch said.

The award-winning community programming included winter auto maintenance classes, vehicle and shop orientations for spouses with deployed husbands, and involvement in the Edge! program to offer youth the chance to fix up a vehicle.

"We're here for ... everybody on this post. There's many times I've stayed late to help them finish," said Cory McDowell, auto skills facilities operator and certified

Getting ready

Units begin preparing loved ones for Soldiers' return

by Sandra Wilson

Preparations for the return of 172nd Infantry Brigade (Separate) have begun and family members and friends may find themselves on pins and needles as the much anticipated day approaches for their Soldier to come home.

To prepare those awaiting that special day, battalions have organized redeployment informational meetings. 1st Battalion, 2nd Infantry Regiment held two such gatherings Tuesday, Oct. 6 to lay out the welcome home notification procedures.

"It's always good to have a refresher," said Lori Rothe, family member of 1st Bn, 2nd IN, explaining that this is her family's second redeployment.

Spouses and other designated guests can expect two phone calls, according to Capt. Joshua Buchanan, commander of Company D, 1st Bn, 2nd IN. The first call will notify them that their Soldier has secured a seat on the airplane and will be in Germany within the next 24 to 48 hours.

"There are never-ending obstacles to getting your husbands home sometimes," Buchanan explained to the spouses at the meeting about the mechanical difficulties that can occur with airplane and bus transit back to Schweinfurt. Because of possible delays, Soldiers may not return in their scheduled order of initial departure from Kuwait.

Once the Soldier is off the plane and has begun the journey toward Schweinfurt, the second call goes out to the family member. The caller gives an approximated time that the Soldier will arrive in Schweinfurt and will include a scheduled time for their welcome home reception ceremony.

"We ask you go straight to Finney gym for the welcome home ceremony," he said.

"It will not happen any earlier than that," he said about the ceremony time given to the spouses in the second phone call. But, he said, family members and friends are welcome to arrive early at the gym if they don't mind waiting.

Upon arrival to Schweinfurt, Soldiers must complete the unit reception stations before being transported to the welcome home reception at the Finney gym to be reunited with their families.

"It's going to be a big change for them" to have dad around again, said Rothe about her three young children.

Capt. Joshua Buchanan talks to spouses Monday, Oct. 6 about the Soldiers' redeployment.

Many family members, including Rothe, are adorning their homes with ribbons and decorations, waiting to hang the personalized banners outside at the appropriate time.

"If your banner is in good taste, there should be no problem with having it hung two days before and two days after" the arrival of one's Soldier, Buchanan said. In past deployments, there had been issues with ribbons and banners staying up for extended periods of time, he said.

"We're working directly with the garrison, building coordinators, DPW to ensure that we meet the banner policy in a way that welcomes home our Soldiers in a world-class effort," Buchanan said.

Not only are family members getting ready with their decorations, but volunteers are also cleaning the areas and preparing the barracks for the returning single Soldiers.

"They've done so much over there and for them to walk in and see how much we appreciate all they've done" is the goal, said family member Caroline Palmer.

AWARD

mechanic. "We understand that not everybody's born as a mechanic."

In addition to classes and facility and equipment improvements, the team at the Schweinfurt auto skills center has often been asked for help behind the scenes.

Using their forklift, they've move grand stands and bleachers, set up wrecked-car memorial displays, picked up abandoned vehicles, and hosted a Fourth of July car show with 42 entries.

"I have a very well-trained staff, and we communicate with each other very well," Woditsch said, explaining how he sends his employees to automotive training as much as possible and cross-trains them as well. "If problems arise or the community needs us to do anything ... we are able to react very quickly."

Another award under their belt has not stopped the momentum.

"We have a big passion for it," Woditsch said. "We refuse to be just another run down crafts shop in the corner."

"(The award) just gives us more motivation," McDowell said.

Behavioral Health Team aims to curb domestic violence

Editor's note: This is the first of a three-part series to raise awareness during Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

By Nathan Van Schaik

Reintegration can be a time of both excitement and anxiety for military families. It, however, may also be a time whereby military families are at a greater risk of domestic violence, according to Dorian Rinehart, the Family Advocacy Program supervisor for U.S. Army Schweinfurt Health Clinic.

"We see a rise in domestic violence six months prior to and nine months after deployment," Rinehart said. Multiple deployments can also take a toll on the lives of military families. Among family members dealing with domestic violence, individual cases of violence per family tend to increase incrementally with each successive deployment, according to Rinehart.

To deal with the issue, the Army is taking great strides to prevent domestic violence before it even starts.

The Europe Region Medical Command (ERMC) recently dispatched a five member Behavioral Health Team to Iraq as part of the Army's effort to facilitate the reintegration process for members of the 172nd Infantry Brigade (Separate). Capt. Diana Colon, a behavioral health clinician and chief of Social Work Service at the Schweinfurt Health Clinic, was part of the team traveling to Iraq.

"We were aiming to integrate physical, behavioral, spiritual health care and support of families by going to their commanders downrange and talking to them personally and finding out what are the issues and giving them a heads-up to what the families are to expect during the integration week," Colon said.

To the soldiers who will soon be returning home, Colon's message on family violence was clear: "Get help before it leads to pushing and shoving and destruction of property."

"During our briefings we always gave an example that alcohol is a real issue," Colon said. While there might be no direct correlation between alcohol and family violence, alcohol could exacerbate problems in the home, she said.

In addition to offering services on site, Colon met with Soldiers already receiving treatment. Her goal was to create a seamless transition from treatment downrange to treatment at the behavioral health facilities in Schweinfurt.

"We want to make sure nobody slips through the cracks," Colon said. Her visit to Iraq aims to reduce the chance that Soldiers returning from Iraq might feel distanced from behavioral health care providers or unable to schedule a timely appointment.

"No, you get a same-day appointment. We'll see you right away. That's our commitment to this group and every other group," she said.

Right place at the right time

Survey prompts significant changes in AAFES school lunches

AAFES Europe press release

MAINZ-KASTEL, Germany—A survey, administered last spring by the school lunch provider at Army and Air Force installations in nine countries overseas, has resulted in some noticeable changes to the menu for the current school year.

“The results made it clear that the vegetarian option should consist of more than just a salad and options for students unable to tolerate the protein gluten found in wheat, barley or rye should be expanded,” said Army & Air Force Exchange Service school lunch program’s staff dietician Maj. Janetta Blackmore.

“Our homework was not only to find a way to meet the daily nutritional needs of gluten-sensitive and vegetarian students, but also satisfy the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s nutritional guidelines while providing meals that taste good,” she said.

A summer of work later, AAFES-operated lunchrooms are serving up a diverse menu that includes turkey tetrazzini, blackbean burgers, spinach & tomato salads, whole grain pastas and “chik’n” nuggets for vegetarians as well as nine gluten free entrées for gluten-sensitive students.

In addition to meals specific to special dietary considerations, the AAFES survey resulted in changes to standard school lunch options including more frozen vs. canned vegetables.

“We are even changing the way we serve foods to the students, arranging items in individual portions on trays to showcase the various food choices” Blackmore said. “And High school students now have six choices instead of the four they had last year and elementary students’ options have gone from three to four meals each day.”

Consistent with the feedback received, AAFES’ school lunch team is also decreasing flash-fried foods and placing a greater emphasize on baking. In fact, schools within the AAFES system in Europe are already relying solely on baked goods while kitchens in the Pacific work to acquire the equipment needed to totally eliminate fried products from their a la carte menus.

“What we’re providing is a direct result of the input received last year,” said Blackmore. “I think it’s important that everyone knows that their input is important to the quality of the school experience and hope parents and students will keep the changes in mind when AAFES conducts its next school lunch survey this spring.”
