

'Saber Charge'

Story and photos by Mark Heeter

The 1st Squadron, 91st Cavalry Regiment (Airborne) yesterday wrapped up a 10-day training exercise, "Operation Saber Charge," that offered platoon leaders and their Soldiers the opportunity to train on a wide variety of tasks.

"It's an opportunity on the dry-fire ranges to get the new platoon leaders to move their platoons around with commander oversight" with outside observer-controller (OC) oversight, said Capt. Perry Morton, spokesman for the 1-91 CAV.

The missions included the live firing at Wildflecken ranges, and cordon-and-search, mounted patrols and dismounted key leader engagements, all at Camp Robertson training area.

"Having a training area out here like this, close to Ledward, close to the Bundeswehr, allows us to concentrate on the training, rather than the preparation," Morton said of the benefits to having such an expansive local training area.

Operation Saber Charge gave the small, platoon-sized units a chance to find their rhythm and define their standard operating procedures, according to 1st Lt. Jay Feldt, 1st Platoon leader, Blackhorse Troop.

"There are so many different scenarios. Right now, we're trying to get our baseline,

SAS hosts special guest

Gudrun Grieser, Lord Mayor of the city of Schweinfurt, listens to a question from the crowd during her visit to the USAG Schweinfurt School Age Services (SAS) Monday. Grieser was the guest of honor and speaker at the SAS women's history celebration. The children and staff treated the Lord Mayor to a musical performance, a poem, and brief histories of prominent figures in women's history. After receiving a hand-made painting and bouquet of flowers, Grieser gave the children tickets to the Silvana swimming complex and invited them to visit her in the city hall. (Photo by Mark Heeter)

Community 6 week outlook calendar

Opportunities abound at FOB Kalsu

FORWARD OPERATING BASE KALSU, Iraq – Going to school is not usually on a Soldier’s mind in a deployed environment; however, the education center here is looking to change that.

The education center is currently running two classes, the Functional Academic Skills Training class and the Leadership Enhancement Course. Students can also take online courses at the education center located right outside of the 172nd Infantry Brigade Tactical Operation Center.

The FAST class is a course designed to help Soldiers improve their General Technical score for the Armed Forces Classifications Test, which is a test for enlisted Soldiers equivalent to the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery. The class is 60 hours long and is broken into four-hour sessions for three weeks.

“I’m glad that I’m able to take this class because it will help me raise my GT score, which will help me to become a career counselor,” said Staff Sgt. Roberto Villanueva, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 9th Engineer Battalion, retention noncommissioned officer.

The LEC class provides Soldiers the opportunity to improve their leadership skill to become better NCOs. The class is a two-week course of two-hour sessions, held Monday through Friday. Students who complete this course also receive one accredited hour with Central Texas College.

FAST and LEC classes vary in times to accommodate Soldiers’ schedules.

A unique feature of these classes is the instructors. They are Soldiers with bachelor degrees that the coordinator of the education center authorizes to teach.

“I feel that the students have responded well to the courses that are offered and I hope to continue teaching for the education center,” said Capt. Steven Carter, 9th EN Bn. battle captain.

Soldiers who wish to take classes must consult their first line supervisors to ensure mission cycles permit attendance to the desired class. Once cleared by their chain of command, the Soldier’s first sergeant enrolls them in the course through the educa-

The education center staff plans to increase the offerings to include classes that can be used toward undergraduate degrees.

“We are trying to coordinate other classes for Soldiers to take,” said 9th EN Bn. Command Sgt. Maj. Christopher J. Walton, the education center coordinator.

“By having the education center operational for Soldiers, they are offered an opportunity to build their career, gain promotion points, the ability to change their job and better their lives, both military and civilian,” Walton said.

April is Month of the Military Child

The bubble launch is one of many activities planned by organizations throughout the Schweinfurt community during the month of April to ensure the selfless youth of the community are recognized.

“We want to support children in any way we can especially during the deployment. Children sacrifice so much and we want to be there for them,” said Heidi Woodall, CDC supervisory program lead, who assisted in the bubble launch. (Photo by Emily Athens)

Local youth captures Bavarian fencing title

By Emily Athens

A thrust, a dodge, a gold medal. Kendric McIntyre, an eighth-grader in the Schweinfurt community, was named Bavarian champion fencer for his age group at the Bavarian State Fencing Championship March 21 held in Feldkirchen, Germany.

McIntyre, who fences with the Turngemeinde (TG) 1848 Schweinfurt Fencing Club, which competes in the Bavarian Fencing Association, exuded crafty swordsmanship and sheer talent to overtake his competitor.

“I’ve been fencing for eight years. When we first got here, my mom thought I might be into it, so we went and I tried it out. Ever since then, I’ve been into it ... it just gets better and better,” McIntyre said.

Demonstrating his expertise of the sport, McIntyre explained the three different types of swords and style of fight involved in fencing: the foil, sabre, and epee. Each category entails a different sword and diverse rules of the game.

For McIntyre, the epee remains his forte, where he maneuvers a heavier sword and receives points by hitting his opponent anywhere on the body. Epee sword-fighting requires agility, skill and tactic to not only score points, but to successfully defend as well.

“To train, I go one-on-one with my coach to work a little extra and do exercises so my legs get stronger,” McIntyre said, explaining how he prepares for competitions.

Competitions occur sporadically throughout the eight months of the fencing season, requiring McIntyre to travel all over Germany.

It was this most recent competition that rewarded McIntyre with the gold medal.

“Out of my eight years of fencing, that was the first time I got first place for singles,” McIntyre said, adding that he got first place for the team last year, but has never won in an individual competition.

After a first round ranking him third place, and a win in the second round of which he deemed a “slow match”, McIntyre qualified into the final round, dueling a fellow Schweinfurt fencer.

McIntyre remembered thinking, “I have this. This is my chance to get first,” as he readied himself for the champion match.

The final fight remained close to the very end. At a score of 9-8 in a match to ten, McIntyre explained his final move of doing a flash, where he ran at his opponent.

“I didn’t realize I hit his hand, but all you heard was ‘ding’ and I just saw him get upset and say, ‘Yeah, you won.’ My heart was pumping so hard. I can’t explain it, I was just so happy,” McIntyre said, shaking his head, at a loss for words.

With the fervent support of his family, friends, and teammates, McIntyre will remember that winning moment as he heads to the German championship in May.

“The first five from the tournament qualified to go to the German championship,” he explained, “My dream is to become German champion.”

“All his hard work paid off. He deserves it. He’s a good teammate, a great brother and son. We’re so proud to see him rewarded for his hard work,” added his mother, Claudia.

German Soldiers add realism to training

High above the crowd gathered below, in one of the towers at the Camp Robertson training area north of Schweinfurt, a young man dressed in black begins crying out the graces of Allah. Below, another group of about twenty men, on their knees facing east, conducts Muslim prayers.

About 40 German Soldiers from the 5th Reconnaissance Battalion, the partnership unit of the 1st Squadron, 91st Cavalry Regiment, played opposing forces and civilians on the battlefield during the just-completed Operation Saber Charge.

"I've been to a couple different training areas, but here the civilians on the battlefield have been real professional. They've run the lanes and they've got a good sense of what their mission is," said Staff Sgt. Jeff Marschewicz a senior scout with 1st Platoon, Blackhorse Troop.

"It's good to see how the Americans do this here. It's also something different for us," said Hans Henninger, who played a farmer during the mounted patrol training.

Thomas Veste and two other Germans soldier role-played as farmers during Operation Saber Charge.

trying to get the basics down. That way, we can form our team, our platoon," Feldt said.

"You can plan a perfect plan and have the most detailed thing, but as soon as you cross that wire, you have no idea what's going to happen. Anything can happen. You can't plan for everything," he said.

Feldt, his platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Steve Carbajal, and senior scout, Staff Sgt. Jeff Marschewski, are a new leadership team and were using the exercise to develop their standard operating procedures.

"This is the first time the three of us are working together," Carbajal said.

"It gives us an opportunity to see what we need to do to get the information to the lowest level," and allows them to develop plans constantly," Carbajal said.

The Soldiers used the exercise to draw on their knowledge and experiences, especially with such a highly combat-tested group of Soldiers, Marschewski said.

"We've got a lot of different guys from a lot of different units. And when we all come together and come with different plans, we've got good knowledge around the platoon," he said.

During the cordon-and-search missions, while Soldiers were on the ground fighting, Apache helicopter crews from the Ansbach-based 12th Combat Aviation Brigade flew in and provided over watch support.

"The 12th CAB to come out and support us, both attack and lift, and they came on board about two weeks ago and said they wanted to come out here and support this training," said Lt. Col. Paul Fellingner, 1st Sqdn, 91st CAV (Airborne) commander.

Fellingner, watching a cordon-and-search mission March 24, called his unit "one of the most versatile units in the United States Army. We can do it from a parachute. We can do it from a vehicle. We can walk in."

Feldt, likely sharing the sentiments of his fellow platoon leaders, was grateful for the chance to exercise their leadership within the confines of the larger, squadron-level mission.

"(Squadron leadership) also allowed us about three days or so to ourselves, so that we can specifically develop our own plans, down to the troop level, down to the section and team level. And that's what we really need," he said.

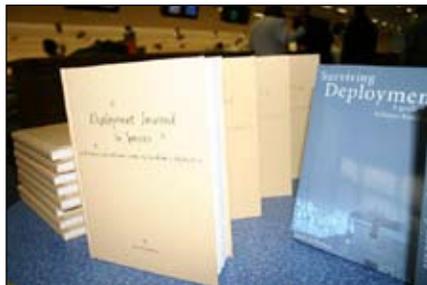

Fun fest!

The 172nd Infantry Brigade (Separate) family got together for a fun fest in the Kessler Fitness Center and bowling center Friday. The event, packed with activities for the whole family, was part of the 100-day celebration, marking that milestone in the Blackhawk Brigade's current deployment to Iraq.

"This was the product of a lot of hard work with all the battalions, the Blackhawk Brigade, and the community to celebrate 100 days," said Capt. Josh Buchanan, D Co, 2nd Battalion, 1st Infantry Regiment commander, and participant in a related event that evening. Story on page 9. (Photos by Mark Heeter)

Fun well into the night for 'Blackhawk 100 days'

by Sandra Wilson

The 172nd Infantry Brigade "Blackhawk" community came together Friday for a celebration of 100 days into the deployment with a casual dinner at the Conn Club.

"The purpose is to have casual dinner and camaraderie and to share some lessons learned ... and share some experiences together," said Lt. Col. Eric Stetson, Task Force Shield commander, while giving credit to the Schweinfurt community for organizing the event.

"The best part of this event is the fact that it was done as a team effort," said Cpt. Joshua Buchanan, Delta Company commander, 1st Battalion, 2nd Infantry Regiment.

What started as a concept quickly grew into an event in the making with the family readiness groups (FRG), battalions, and community agencies contributing towards the effort.

The casual dinner featured a Spartans Panel of ten members available to answer questions about the deployment experience.

"The important point ... is that we learn from each other," Stetson said. "What we bring is a huge amount of diversity."

The panel was made up of people in various walks of life to add different perspectives.

"It's not about rank. It's not about your position ... it's about you as an individual," Buchanan said.

The panel addressed questions about whether to return to the States when a spouse deploys, how to relieve stress, communication techniques, and how to raise kids as a temporarily single parent.

"You guys haven't been to basic training ... on how to succeed as a family spouse," said Travis Reynolds from USAG Schweinfurt Army Community Service.

"It's important for us to stay and maintain the home front.," said Staff Sgt. Izell King, 1st Bn, 2nd IN.

Others on the panel offered

The fun and festivities at the Blackhawk 100 Days dinner included a biggest-hat competition.

tips for how to deal with deployment stress.

"Every time the sun comes out, make sure you drop what you're doing and go outside," recommended Patricia Burr, USAG Schweinfurt behavioral health. Relieving stress also can come in the form of time with friends, window shopping, aerobics, reading, or volunteering.

Some spouses talk nearly every day, while Stetson proposed that purposefully calling once a week ensured that conversations were anticipated and meaningful.

Mailed handwritten letters ranked high in importance, and one panel member suggested logging journal entries and mailing that back and forth each month.

What a bazaar!

Finney Fitness Center on Conn Barracks was turned into a shoppers' paradise March 27-29 at the Schweinfurt Community Spouses' Club (SCSC) annual bazaar. The event brought in close to $150,000, about $30,000 of which will be retained by the SCSC and donated to the Schweinfurt community, according to Audrey Caldwell, SCSC bazaar committee chairperson.
