Sgt. Tyler Leopold, a canine trainer with the Military Police, tries to coax Ingo, a German shepherd, to release Sgt. Richard McNulty during training. The dogs learn both aggressive attack skills and finely-tuned scent detection for drugs and explosives.

Working dogs undergo rigorous training

By Charles Stadlander

Sgt. Richard McNulty ran as fast as he could in the bulky bite-proof suit, but he knew his slow speed would be no match for his pursuer, a German shepherd named Ingo. Within seconds, Ingo caught up, flew through the air like a spear and pinned McNulty, leaving him prone and struggling to free his arm from the dog's powerful jaws.

McNulty, Sgt. Tyler Leopold and Spc. Jeffrey Michaud are part of Schweinfurt's Military Police and trainers of working dogs for use both in Germany and deployments to the Middle East. This attack was part of the four hours of training required weekly of each dog.

Use your kitchen wisely

Now that summer is over, you can reduce your refrigerator's cooling setting. Other energy-saving kitchen tips: boil water in an electric kettle instead of on the stovetop and thaw frozen foods to reduce cooking time.
